

ANDREAS STADLER, born 1965, is an Austrian diplomat and academic. He currently represents Austria at the Organization for Security and Cooperation (OSCE) in Vienna and is responsible - among other portfolios - for its Economic and Environmental Dimension. He also teaches cultural diplomacy at the Vienna University of Applied Arts and publishes on international relations and cultural politics.

From 2007 to autumn 2013 Mr. Stadler was the director of the Austrian Cultural Forum New York, Austria's most important public and cultural diplomacy flagship abroad. He was elected president of the European Cultural Institutes of New York (EUNIC) for 2011 and 2012. The cultural and academic programs that Mr. Stadler has curated in collaboration with prestigious American and international institutions have received favorable reviews by leading media such as the New York Times, New York Magazine, The Wall Street Journal, Artforum and Art in America.

During his work as Deputy Ambassador of Austria in Zagreb, Croatia (1995-99), he was publicly recognized for actively promoting post conflict reconciliation policies and human and civil rights.

Later he became director of the Austrian Cultural Forum in Warsaw, Poland (1999-2004), where he proactively engaged in supporting the accession effort with the European Union to great public acclaim. He received high decorations from the Mayor of Warsaw and the Polish Minister of Culture in 2004.

From 2004 to 2007 Mr. Stadler served as the first advisor for science, arts, and culture to the President of Austria, Dr. Heinz Fischer.

Mr. Stadler received his education at the Universities of Vienna, Warsaw and the European University Institute in Florence where he specialized in Political Science, Economy and International Relations. He is fluent in six languages which include English, German, French, Italian, Polish, Serbo-Croatian, and has a basic knowledge of Spanish and Russian.
